PARENT-TEACHER PARTNERSHIP IN ATTAINING QUALITY EDUCATION

by:
Ruvirosa B. Felipe
Bantan Elementary School

It is an old belief that providing quality education among children is the job only of the school or the teacher and not of home or the parents. This is why when our kids not perform well in school, we put the blame on teachers or we question the educational system of the school.

We need to understand that providing good education to school children is a strong partnership between the parents and the school. The home and the support of the parents to their children will lead towards achieving the best learning experiences. Since early education starts at home, the parents must be careful in molding their kids especially when it comes to their values formation. This kind of discipline that each learners gained at home will greatly and directly affect how our children will behave in school.

If we value the education of our children and their future as well, the home should take their place and the school as well. To continually strengthen the relationship between parent and teacher it must improve the class standing of each child, an enhance Parent Teacher Association is being encourage. Not only during the distribution of report cards every grading/rating period will the mentor and parents will meet but the visitation of parents in school is then encourage to be done regularly so that the two parties will develop the camaraderie in raising the child to its fullest. The strong relationship of teachers and parents in school was found to be one of the best way to inspire the children in attending their classes regularly.
References:

The Modern Teacher
June 2009
August 2015
Parent-Teacher Partnership in Attaining Quality Education, Slide share