In this current educational set up, the learning of an individual may not only rely on the altruistic effort of teachers alone but also on the continuous guidance of the parents as well. The parent’s involvement in school as to support the full development of the child may greatly affect the outcome of one’s learning.

Partnership with parents may be instrumental in learning as well as in proper rearing. It is a must that parents are involved in the education of the learner. Partnership with parents is one effective means to give more attention to the schoolchildren most especially those who need extra guidance.

The collaborative effort with parents may mean a lot. The teacher and parents may work hand in hand in honing the utmost skills, talents and abilities of the child thus making him or her more productive, progressive and talented. The joint efforts that teachers and parents may apply could cease the child’s difficulty and boost his/her morale in the search for knowledge and further education.

Engaging parents in school activities may also contribute in the prevention of absenteeism, drop out and loss of interest in the school. The active involvement and support of parents during school programs and other activities may inspire their children not only in their studies but also to do other related things as well.
Listening to the concerns of parents is vital in improving the school management and operations. Have them as part of the school as stakeholders. In this way they are practicing their earnest involvement not for their sake but for the benefit of the learners that they care for.

It is not only in school that parents may show their involvement. Leading them to provide learning environment at home is one important step. Parents may follow up the homework of their children. They can also give attention to the way they read and write, on how to understand the texts in the books and on how analyze simple mathematical problems.

Schools also conduct parenting seminars for the parents. This is giving the parents pointers or tips on how to handle their children very well. The involvement of parents in this undertaking may instruct the parents in the proper way of upbringing the child, in handling problem situations and in employing strategies on how to motivate the child in achieving better life and education.

Parents’ visibility in school in times they are needed is essential in inspiring the students to attain better academic achievement. The students may see and feel that their parents value education and in return they would do the same.
The parents who instill what education can do to one’s life may develop a child who will value education. Parent’s involvement in the school signifies a lot to the child. It has a big impact on the education of the learners.

If we want to see a generation of well-educated individuals; if we want to see young people who are well-guided; if we want to see a better generation of graduates then we have to involve the parents in the education of the learners.

Consequently, parents should also see their importance and it is a must that they should involve themselves earnestly in better guiding their children for better standard or quality of education.

References:

Laura Merrick, March 30, 2016. TeacherPop

https://www.teachforamerica.org/teacherpop/4-ways-increase-parent-involvement

http://www.kellybear.com/TeacherArticles/TeacherTip22.html