PARENTS INVOLVEMENT IN THE SCHOOL

by:
Maria P. Beltran

The world is like a giant stage and human development, one grand experiment. Individuals have different roles to perform. Parents are individuals who have a great role to perform in this world. The way in which an infant is transformed into an adult is a very profound role that parents perform. Another magnanimous role that a parent performs is how to develop and monitor the growth and education of their children.

One way to resolve some issues and concerns in the school can be through parents’ engagement in the school matters. Also, one way is for parents to support students’ learning at home and at school or participating in the life of the classroom, school and community, and this is one way of proven success.

Parents’ involvement and students’ achievement are backed up by extensive research. According to Education Week, students with involved parents get better grades and test scores and are more likely to finish their studies.

Parental involvement and children’s outcomes count a lot and this really matters. First and foremost are the social problems that afflicts the young, may prevent delinquency, drug abuse, and teen pregnancy. In the school, they promote happiness and a desire for achievement and this really matters.

Good parenting is needed by a child in the school and in his life. In addition, parents of this particular category are an asset to a school. Children will have lesser disciplinary problems or none at all.
Lawrence Steinberg, author of the book The Ten Basic Principles of Good Parenting emphasized some reminders on good parenting. First, parents must be proud for having born the child. You must recognize the privilege. Next, don’t try to mold them according to your understanding of life. Another, always give them true love.. Don’t rush them into growing up.. Let him grow into his own intelligence by making it a time to learn and not a time to teach. One important thing is to provide them with a supportive and loving atmosphere. Stop imposing strong discipline instead instill a strong friendship..

With these in mind, there is no reason why children in the school will be a disciplinary problem.

Reference:
Boosting your Child’s Self Esteem Kids Health. Org/en/p from Nemours