Since the start of the pandemic, COVID-19, schools have been forced to close in order to avoid the transmission of virus. Now children need to stay home and continue their classes through online and modular learning. The use of technology and digital tools are important for teachers and students however the support from parents are needed.

As learning continue with distance, teachers use technology to ensure children’s learning even at home. Adjustments are expected because this is something new to everyone. Parents’ support is very essential for children to continue learning at home.

Parents should establish healthy routines and schedule for their children to follow. Helping the children wake up early for studying and setting bedtime habits will help them get used to online learning even at home. Setting enough time for gadget use is also important. Having healthy sleeping routines may help enhance learning.

Setting up a place where the children can study quietly and peacefully will help the children focus with their activities. It is important that this place is far from distraction and have good internet connection.

Working together with the teachers can help their children do task easily. Communication between parents and teachers will help them monitor the children’s progress. Knowing what students need will also make it easier to be addressed.

Adapting to changes can be hard at first but with the support and reassurance from parents learning will be ensured. Help from parents can help avoid students’ challenges and disappointments. Stress and anxiety are unavoidable but helping children overcome these will help their mental health and give them opportunity to learn without worries.

Parents play a big role with the learning of students. With the collaborated efforts of teachers and parents, students will have a better future ahead of them even in the middle of pandemic.
