PARENTS’ ROLE IN IMPROVING OUR SCHOOLS

by:

Dorothy V. Manansala
Teacher III, Panilao Elementary School

“The true test of civilization is not the census, nor the size of cities, nor the properties, but the kind of people the country turns out, which solely depends on the kind of leadership we have at the school level.” - Ralph Waldo Emerson

The child is one of the most important asset and gift of God to mankind. The first training ground of the child starts at home. Consequently, every member of the family should do his part and try everything to make the home a wholesome and harmonious place as its atmosphere and conditions will greatly influence the child’s development. Strong feelings of affection given at home, strong family ties and good discipline should be encouraged for the child’s success. Development of the child can be influenced by the people around him like his parents, peers, friends and other siblings. He can also be affected depending on what kind of society he is living, discipline and training that is inculcated to him.

The existence of the Parent-Teachers Association has proven to be the effective instrument in the solution of many school problems when parents talk often with teachers and become involved in the school. There are many ways that parents and teachers can communicate with each other preferably than relying on the scheduled teacher conferences. Close communication between teachers and parents can help students for better learning condition. And so, this organization is considered as the best partner of the school improvement.

References:

http://rbkschool.org/blog/importance-of-parent-teacher-association.html