The Department of Education persisted that schooling should proceed even in the midst of emergency. This does not just allude to educators and pupils, however of same degree, to parents as well.

As it embarks for the "new normal' in academe because of the progressions achieved by the COVID-19 emergency, the DepEd underscores the significant part of guardians and parents in ensuring that the learning of their kids will proceed in the midst of anticipated interruptions.

The participation and assistance coming from parents is profoundly sought and is vital as the whole essential scholastic framework navigates for the purported new learning and teaching set-up.

The part of the parents in distance learning is indispensable for they are in charge in providing the space to be utilized, devices, web access, among others in the solace of their abode for online learning. Meanwhile, in schools that actualizes modular learning, parents are obliged to go to school for the distribution and retrieval of self-learning modules.

Besides, the extent of DepEd's obligations is reached out to parents and other relatives to guarantee the achievement in actualizing distance learning. However, the difficulties engaged with genuinely and impartially including guardians in the scholarly accomplishment of their kids is a gigantic issue since they will be the ones or other significant relatives who will teach their kids at home. This set-up is very challenging for all parents.

In connection, parents and educators should have a mutual and consistent correspondence and coordinated effort to guarantee that the pupils learn and be fruitful. Close monitoring and feedback should guarantee. In fact, guardians' affection for their youngsters is the single most prominent and most utilized natural asset in instruction particularly in this time of emergency. Their role as temporary teacher of their kids is profoundly esteemed.
