PARENTS’ ROLE IS IMPORTANT TO STUDENTS’ SUCCESS

by:
JOANNA MARIE F. BAGSIC
Teacher II, Mariveles National High School – Cabcaben

Sigmund Freud, a well-known psychologist, assumed that a person’s past and childhood experiences determine future behavior. Experts’ findings reveal that one factor that can be considered as contributory to the students’ academic performance is the experience at home with the family. First and foremost, the first teachers of children are their parents, this includes home experiences, beginning writing and reading, pronouncing and producing letter sounds through children’s storybook, actual storytelling, drawing and counting as a preparation for the pre-school, kindergarten and elementary level of schooling.

Such that, parents are very persevering to their children’s achievement so that their children will lead on the right track as they take their journey. They must continue providing information, not relying too much upon terms of teaching and guiding their classroom teachers. Parent’s role should be purely guidance, motivation and inspiration. Encouraging our children makes them to have learned with happy experience and prioritizing their study life must give emphasis. Parental involvement happens at home through encouraging activities that have an impact on student achievement to ensure that the students have an opportunity for success.

Lastly, be a good friend to our children by offering our helping hand and by giving them space to share everything.
References:

Learning and Challenges, 2017 Learning Liftoff