PEARL SUGAR

I was so inspired in the article of Foster (2014). It was so informative. I gained so many ideas about the different types of sugar and I can also relate myself to those types. In this article, I will focus to “pearl sugar” which is also known as nib sugar or hail sugar. This sugar reminds me of the ethical standards teacher must attend to. Why? From the way Foster described this type of sugar, it holds its shape and doesn’t melt even when exposed to high temperatures.

What is the connection of the characteristics of pearl sugar to teachers’ ethics? As we all know, we all have a tough life in this field. We deal with different types of people. Arguments also transpire from simple conversation with our colleagues and most importantly with parents. We cannot control those situations. However, according to the code of ethics, we have to remain calm, respectful, and composed no matter what happens. Same thing with the role of this sugar, it can sustain and maintain its shape (moral) in spite of the occurrences around them.

We are truly living on stage. We have to internalize our roles. No matter how our audience change their reactions toward us as we perform our duties, we should still maintain our composure and grace.
