PERSONAL MASTERY AND LEADERSHIP

by:

Decelyn G. Vea

Master Teacher I New San Jose ES New San Jose, Din., Bataan

How can leaders be great role models? In some aspects, being a great leader must show how to respect others, each member of a team should be given. A privilege to show interest in having a progressive life. Dreams and goals must be in advance to take a look for a good life and be a better individual. Personal mastery can help a leader to be a role model in his subordinates. It will also give them a chance to acquire self-knowledge and at the same time, promote self-development and growth. It is also necessary for a leader to understand the vision and mission of their organization. A leader who has acquired personal mastery would be able to identify the methods and strategy on how to effectively achieve the organization’s goals and objectives. It allows the individual to deal with change. The only permanent thing in this mundane world is change. Therefore, leaders should be open to change and reality. Accepting change and reality is inevitable and the leader become more open-minded to all the necessities in their organization and methods used in achieving their goals. Personal mastery allows a leader to develop different characteristics that would help them deal with difficult situations. It also helps a leader to understand the team members' weaknesses and strengths. Good leaders should understand how to give feedback and criticisms. The intention behind giving feedback is to support and never despise the person and never control them in order to have a smooth interpersonal relationship among the group of individual.

References:

https://usb-ed.com/blog/improve-your-personal-mastery-in-leadership/