PLANNING: A MUST IN EDUCATION

by:
Sharon A. Nelmeda
Teacher II, Pablo Roman National High School

People plan because they want good things to happen. They plan to hope for the best, to eradicate the mistakes of the past and to have a better future ahead of them.

This is likewise true in the field of education. Educators cannot do away with planning; be it a Top Down Approach or a Bottom-Up Approach, they normally form a network of desired results and events for which all efforts should be exerted.

Planning in education is considered both a challenge and an opportunity. It is a challenge because it is always expected that in planning, practical and realistic solutions has to be sought for the complex problems that may arise. In this regard, a good educational planner must have a ready set of alternatives for their solutions. Another thing is the proper motivation of all the persons concerned from the top officials to the principal, teachers, pupils, and parents. Once the cooperation of the persons concerned is no achieved, the plan will go on as expected. Planning is an opportunity. It always gives us a fair chance to improve education. There is a chance to learn from the past and to develop for the better. It is a tool to dream for good and big things to uplift the quality of education.

The future of our schools today is in the hands of educational managers who need to be good planners. Although plans are not always as they meant them to be, planning reduces the risk of failure.

Remember, nothing beats a man with a shield of knowledge and a sword of wisdom. No weapon formed by the circumstances can bring an educated man down to his feet. A man blessed with proper and decent education can stand-out among the rest, and can bring an inevitable breakthrough in this world.
References:

Milagros Lim-Borabo, Ph.D., Interactive and Innovative Teaching Strategies (2015)