As quoted by Jim Rohn, “Discipline is the bridge between goal and accomplishment. “

This is also synonymous with the positive discipline as employed in the school. This includes the policies, programs, and practices of a school in order to create a safe, supportive learning environment for all students.

Since we are dealing with the new breed of learners a certain generation gap is evident. In order to bridge the said gap, educational managers and educators must apply positive discipline. It is a kind of discipline as prescribed by law that is child-friendly and free from any harm.

The use of punitive punishment is not acceptable in our society most especially at present. What we need is diplomacy in dealing with all kinds of misbehavior and problems in the school. We have to consider the feelings and thoughts of our students and be sensitive to their weaknesses and strengths.

Positive discipline is the latest trend in the way we manage our students most especially in the class. We give due respect to all and eventually suggest ways to resolve the situation and rectify the behavior.

In positive discipline, we are building a better relationship with our students and we establish trust and confidence in them. Moreover, we are also creating a good mirror of the school image as well as the people behind it.

Positive discipline neutralizes the situation and establishes a win-win situation. If the students realize that he/she is faced with the well-respected and trusted people to follow and to work on then a better school atmosphere will be achieved.

It is about time that we shift from the traditional one to the new way of dealing with our students. Since we are in the innovative age, it is just proper that we incorporate heart and understanding in disciplining our learners.

The students may feel that they are in the right place that caters love, care and understanding on the nature of the students and in the situations where the students are indulged.
Positive discipline is what we need at present. It is an ardent response to the existing problems and situations that teachers encounter in the daily interaction with the students.

The school administrators and teachers are also cautious, careful and vigilant in the way they deal with the students. It is advantageous on both sides. The students are being treated well and the school is adhering to better principles when in come to disciplining the students.

Positive discipline is the best way to lead and manage the students. It is what teachers must apply in their daily teaching activities.
