POSITIVE TEACHING

by
Normie G. Ramos
T-1, Antonio G. Llamas Elementary School

In today’s multi-tasking world in the field of education a teacher still has a lot of reasons to smile and say that teaching is indeed a great profession. The teaching career involves numerous activities which are giving happiness to teachers and even to the entire stakeholders of the school.

Teaching is really for service. There is no better way to describe this job as a mere altruistic conveyance of knowledge and abilities to the educational clientele. It is just a very wonderful experience to deal with the young idealistic minds of the learners of the present generation. No amount of money can replace the positive scenario of educating the next builders of the society. So, cheer up and be affirmative in executing your job as a teacher may bring literacy and further development.

Teaching is sharing. Every single word you utter in the class may have a strong impact on the child. The more you share, the more they are being filled with knowledge and wisdom. The good thing is that what you share may change the lives of the students in the positive way. The influences you may give to your learners may affect their values, attitudes and behaviors. It is nice to see that people are improving and growing because of your sharing.

Teaching is truly inspiring. The more you educate the students, the more you inspire them. They are the ones who see your passion and determination in teaching. The more you engage yourself in teaching them, the more they appreciate your efforts. It is better if you extend your hands in reaching them out through your teaching.

Teaching is at the same time loving. The teacher is more after the education of the child. What is important is that the teacher molds the mind and character of the learners. Once a teacher is doing his or her part as the classroom facilitator as they say today, he or she is also loving the educational beneficiaries who are the schoolchildren.
Teaching is also directing. The teacher has the power to direct the path of a certain pupil or student. His or her words may serve as guiding principles in transforming the child into a better person, thus directing the way to a brighter tomorrow. The future of every child lies on the proper guidance of the teacher.

Teaching is also rearing. Considering your students as your own children is a good attitude. For if you treat the individuals with utmost respect and care you may even show how important the children are to you. The positive point is that once you teach them you also rear your own children.

Teaching positively is doing your role as a teacher in the most optimistic way that you can and it yields positive teaching.