PRICELESS

by:

Jeannylynne Urbina- Torres

Most of my articles focused on comparing sugar to my students, but this time, I compare this type of sugar to teachers. I have mentioned that sugar provides sweetness although it comes in different forms. However, this particular kind of sugar I am going to discuss is rare and obviously special. This sugar is minimally processed, have larger grains, darker color, and… higher price tag. I know you can now understand why I deem this sugar similar to us.

The sugar I am talking about is the cane sugar. I believe we must deem ourselves similar to this type for out of the eleven different kinds of sugar, it is the only one mentioned as expensive. It is true that many professions, careers, etc. appear to the picture, still, we have to remember always that we are one of a kind. This profession is still the noblest. The respect and moral reflected back to us is priceless.

To add, this sugar has larger grains and darker color which in my own opinion has to be interpreted as a realization that despite the existence of new blood, we should still project that we are better. We should still stand out amidst the crowd.

In capsule, we should perceive ourselves the same way we view our students. We are special and exceptional.

References: