Learning engagement is one of the fruitful activities that a child may manifest in school. It is the willingness and commitment of each child to indulge oneself in learning. That is why the teachers tend to motivate, inspire, and stimulate the child to be engaged in learning.

There are several ways on how a teacher could promote learning engagement among the pupils or students.

Establishing learning goals would be helpful in motivating the pupils or students to be engaged in learning. These goals would set the direction and would stimulate their interests in learning.

Showing convenience in learning would invite the pupils or students to engross themselves in learning. This means that whenever they see the accessibility of knowledge and the availability of resources in school they would certainly appreciate and love learning.

Presenting creative ideas would be fun and enjoyable on the part of the pupils or students. The teacher is expected to bring out ideas in the class that would invigorate the interests of learners and would excite their willingness to embrace imaginative and innovative ideas.

Having a reward system in the class would help promote learning engagement among the pupils or students. The intrinsic and extrinsic rewards are appealing and inspiring to pupils or students. Rewards can make the learners active and well-engaged.
Building an open communication with the pupils or students would be instrumental in attaining learning engagement among them. They would certainly feel at ease and comfortable with teachers and with peers.

Letting the child work independently is another way to motivate them to be more engaged in learning. When each child feels that he or she can do things by oneself that is the time that he or she develops a learning engagement.

Providing constructive suggestions is also good in developing the learning engagement of the pupils or students. Kind words would inspire them to grow and improve themselves on the things that they do in school.

Making the needs available to the pupils or students would certainly be a way in promoting learning engagement with them. Discover their needs and make these available for their learning.

The promotion of learning engagement among pupils or students may be challenging on the part of the teacher but the results or fruits would be very fulfilling and satisfying.
