The role of education in improving society cannot be ignored. It is crucial for both teachers and parents to come together to ensure that the school operates brilliantly for the welfare of the student. This is well accomplished by the Parent Teacher Association (PTA) in the school.

PTA stands for Parent Teacher Association, a school-based organization with a mission to make the school a better place for children to learn. Parents of students work together with teachers to volunteer in classes, raise money for school supplies, and generally support the school's efforts. PTA members are parent volunteers, and while some schools have large PTAs with officers, a bookkeeper, and an operating budget, other schools have effective PTAs consisting of only a few motivated parents. Technically, a PTA refers to an organization affiliated with the National PTA, while PTO (Parent Teacher Organization) is a more generic term for the same type of group without the official connection to the National PTA.

It's important for teachers and parents to come together to make the school work better. Presumably, a parent needs to know that everything is going on in the school, including the teachers and the school management. The same goes for teachers, too, where students want to learn about social history, preferences, and so on. Much of this really works to the benefit of the students. Knowing all about a student allows teachers to respond to their needs.
One of the greatest related benefits is that it makes teachers consider the students from the parent's point of view, and vice versa. It helps parents know all about the functioning of the school, the problems, and so on. Works to make school a safer place and a better place for quality education. In this context, it is the teachers and parents who sit together and discuss various school issues, and even a specific student. The overall objective of the PTA meeting is to ensure that the school offers students the best learning experience to keep their needs in mind.

Teachers have a vital role to play in the lives of the learners inside and outside the classroom. Teachers are best known for the role of educating and shaping students, both holistically and globally, in their care. Setting up the mood of the classrooms, building a friendly environment, mentoring and nurturing and listening and looking for signs of distress are their roles. And they are the ones who support and enhance the innate talents and full potential of every learner. Quality education is therefore a shared responsibility of teachers and parents.
