The things that we admire most are the ones done with quality. That is why we are ought to yield quality outputs in the school from among the teachers and students. On the teacher’s perspective, quality is attained through the preparation of the teacher’s materials and instructional devices. On the part of the students, quality is obtained through their accomplishments in varied learning areas.

The art of teaching requires professional outputs. This may be reflected on how the teachers make their lesson plans, teaching devices or instructional materials. It is expected that the teachers do the preparations of the lessons systematically and accurately. In addition, the teaching devices or instructional materials are done creatively and innovatively. Hence, if the work is done with greatness therefore there is quality output and this is a sign of productivity.

Teachers are also indulged in related activities like paper works. There are instances that reports are required from teachers. As a professional quality output is expected from a teacher. The teacher does not only make accurate works but also innovative ones. By the utilization of computer technology the reports are being enhanced and became more presentable. Indeed, the teacher’s productivity is shown.

Likewise, the students are compelled to have written outputs and performance tasks. There are essays, researches, articles and reports that need to be submitted on time. Students should do these things with correctness and neatness. Though they are still students, the best outputs from them may be well-appreciated. In this case, productivity is manifested by the students.
The students are also engrossed in experiment. This activity entails extra efforts on the part of the student for aside from actual activity, they still need to make the necessary results and documentation. Once the experiment is finished, an output is to be presented. The successful output of these learners is a proof of quality work that they did and that means productivity.

They are even obliged to make art works and designs. The students may utilize indigenous, recycled or any other available materials. The artistry and creativity are evident in a lot of students. They are showing creativity and innovativeness through their accomplished art works which are considered of quality. Truly, productivity is there.

Teacher and students in the school are both making their respective outputs which are of quality. Once they show greatness in work they also show productivity.

Indeed, it is fruitful if the work is of quality thus productivity is demonstrated.
