REALIZATION

by:
Janette B. Afable
OIC-School Principal, Panilao Elementary School

There was a story of a lady that shared a story of her childhood. She remembered having strict teacher during her early and latter days of her life in school. As a matter of fact, the teacher would tell them that if they don’t have an assignment they have to stand outside the classroom and similarly if they are late. Moreover, the teacher would say don’t forget to bring your books or else the teacher will be indignant. Nowadays it is different. Today, those incidents are decreasing. Because reports says a lot parents complain whether small or big things happen to their children.

Taking a look at the side of a teachers and parents view. A teacher should teach students quality education and be responsible at the same time. It is a teacher’s duty to inculcate to the students the importance of having better mind and be a better person at the same time. Ultimately, not all the things that students learn can be found in books or by just merely reading.

However it is a parent’s obligation to teach the necessity of values and responsibility to their children. It is also vital for parents to put themselves in the shoes of a teacher and contemplate about the weight of the responsibility of a teacher inside a class room handling more than one student, so that benefit of the doubt can be properly given with less contention between two parties.

So the real question is, what is the right way to teach the students? Is being strict the right way or being lenient in addressing concern better? According to Plato, “Do not train children to learning by force and harshness, but help them in directing them to what amuses their minds, so that teachers and parents may be better able to discover with accuracy the exact need of the students.
On the other hand, John W. Gardner said, “Much education now a days is monumentally not effective. A lot of times we are giving young generation cut flowers wherein we should be teaching them to grow their own plants.”

In conclusion, the realization is both teachers and parents have the tremendous obligation to help and teach the students be ready for the future and become the person we wanted them to become. There are many teachers who wholeheartedly and passionately give their best efforts to help their students learn. Parents sacrifice a lot to send their children to school for the same goal and dedicated teachers support those sacrifices in spearheading quality education for the students.

Working hand in hand in teaching correct values is important and contention was never an answer but rather a willing heart to listen and a willing heart to look for solutions in existing problems. What a great future lies ahead in future generation if proper collaboration is working.

Proven that through experiences people are learning every day.

References:

1. Education: Plato and Education

2. Multiple Intelligences: A Theory for Everyone
   https://www.educationworld.com/a_curr/curr054.shtml