Teachers are forever students. Our life does not end at the four corners of the classroom. We have to search for more teaching strategies to make our lessons more interesting and must easily be absorbed by the students. Making complicated things into simpler ones is our task. Teaching the students to be a better individual and mold their skills for their progressive future are our tasks as teachers.

The teaching profession will not be completed without the seminars and trainings of the educators for us to gain more knowledge that can be used in teaching the learners. Aside from that, most of the teachers enroll in the graduate studies for professional growth. Some of the educators ignore the graduate school due to lack of time and financial support without realizing its benefits in the field of education.

According to Mooney (2018), it is not only the wisdom but the leadership skills that you may acquire in the graduate school that will make you as a role model and leader in front of the class. In the university, your confidence may develop and the knowledge that you will absorbed will lead you to positively face the challenges in the teaching profession and this will help you to make your students to be more productive and wise.

Moreover, Phillpott (2017) believed that achieving your master’s degree is a stepping stone for the progress of one’s career and self-improvement as well. This will serve as a road for professional growth and personal development. This will also motivate the teachers to learn something new and unique methods for the teaching profession. This will lead them to face more challenges, learning new life skills and adapting culture. He also emphasized that master’s degree will make you smarter and will improve your analytical skills. It is a mixed of successful excellence, hands-on experience and teamwork that will make you more fruitful.

Furthermore, Hopper (2014) stated that Master’s degree gives you more career options. This allows you to upgrade your alma mater. Teachers may be transferred to universities and colleges. This may be an opportunity for them to get part time jobs in other schools. You may edit researches and can be a thesis adviser. More financial blessings may come and will create a positive outcome to the economic status of the teachers.

To sum up, earning a master’s degree is essential to the life of the educators. This will help them to achieve their dreams as a mentor and grow in the field of education. WE should not think that it takes a lot of time, money and patience but the benefits that it will be given to us, to be more progressive, prolific and to become confident in embracing the changes in the world of education.
