“Practice what you preach”, as one of the old adages that may be applied to all. If one wants to follow what he/she says, the best way to encourage them is to let them see that you practice what you say. One of the most influential persons today is a teacher. They are the active agent of change in the society. If they are aiming to produce responsible citizens, they should be the first to be one.

Thus, it can be concluded that a teacher is one of the most influential persons in the lives of every learner. That is why teachers should be careful in every action as they are followed mostly by their students. In relation to this, teachers should be critical in knowing what is morally right and wrong in doing their job because many innocent individuals are following them. However, that is one of the biggest challenges in the lives of every teacher. A teacher should be morally right at all times because they are teachers, a role model in one’s society. A role model knows how to follow the norms of the society, know when to follow, and know what to follow.

Lastly, a good role model of the society is also a good follower.
