It is indeed true that education is the only thing that cannot be taken away from someone; the only thing that you will not regret investing. As I come to think of it, I cannot help but feel lucky to have been given the opportunity to pursue education and educate children. It was an overwhelming yet wonderful experience since I've been able to do my passion and get the chance to be a part of my student's lives. However, I was kind of disappointed knowing that people are deciding not to care about something obviously important. How are we supposed to dampen the fire that lights our path?

Through the years, I've seen the continuous change in our education system. The curriculum has been dynamic since then, and maybe the teaching tactics and materials, too. But personally, I think, that maybe we are lacking progress, discipline, and the urge to engage ourselves within greatest life's competition. That is why I am truly glad when the curriculum has been changed to K-12, a system in which most of the countries had adopted. I strongly believe that through this curriculum, we are able to enhance our youth's ability and skills because we are not only focusing on the cognitive skills of children but also on their holistic being as well.

The Senior High School students, from what I have observed, have been trained and required to do research subjects and on-the-job training that will definitely help them to fully discover their potential before going through the tertiary level. As what DepEd Assistant Secretary Tonisito Umali stated, and I quote “If they [students] will proceed to college they will have the basic competencies that they didn’t have before under the 10-year basic education cycle. We teach them what needs to be learned.” This curriculum is also a big help for those who are not going to pursue college since after they have finished the last year, they are sure ready to meet of life's greatest demands.
which is to have a job. To which I feel relieved for I have been slowly seeing the chance of the comeback of quality education. May this be the start of a bright future for all of us and may we not take education for granted. Let us light our path by nurturing ourselves and making the best of what we have. We need not waste every second that we can learn something new. Stand up! Educate and be educated!
