High School life is the most thrilling and exciting part of being a student. It encompasses almost half of one’s youth. This is the stage where happiness is at its peak, rejection is common, and responsibility is unnecessary. Here, discovering that instead of getting high grades or scores, having fun and playing around is preferable. Meeting a new bunch of strangers that turned out to be one of the greatest friends are the gifts from high school anyone can treasure for a lifetime. Each corner of the classroom has plenty of stories to tell, like how every student laugh at each other's silly jokes, every song the whole class sang together, all the small misunderstandings, and, of course, the joyous moment everyone shared. But as soon as the light of the bulb turns off, it is a sign that it is time for everyone to go home, that it is already time for you to face your upcoming future.

The first hurdle to overcome is choosing a course that you want to take up in college, a path that you believe can transform you to attain the height of your success. Choices tend to change over time, and the influence of others can also affect these choices. That is why choosing a course could be a great challenge for most people, especially those who are unsure and afraid to take a step in the next chapter of their lives. There are several factors to consider before selecting a course. These factors are financial terms, geographic location, academic excellence, and line of interest.

Before deciding on the course that you want to take up in college, it is important to consider the financial terms of your parents. Monetary value plays a huge role when studying at your preferred universities. Upon enrollment, some universities may offer free tuition fees. But there are still miscellaneous fees and book allowances that need settlement. Geographic location is also important to take note of because preferred courses may not be available in nearby schools. Most of the schools follow a certain grade standard for accepting student applicants. Therefore, having good grades is the key to earn courses of your choice. However, what matters most is a person’s interest. Acquiring a course that fits the bill and suits your line of interests would be perfect.

But perfection is a good hider, for it is hard to find. Chances of finding perfection are not always over the counter. Hundreds of stairs are needed to take to reach one's ideal success. Not all students can pursue their choice of courses because of such hindrances in their way. That is why most students fail to get the course they are eyeing on. To the point, that fate leaves them no choice but to take the option written at the end of the list. Because of this lack of privilege, some students decide to take what is available, while others choose practicality over desired ambition and have no choice but to set their goals behind and settle for less.

References:
https://www.universitymagazine.ca/4-factors-consider-choosing-course-study/