The noblest profession I’ve ever acknowledged is teaching. When we hear this expression, we are referring to a teacher. A teacher, a molder of our youth, a preacher of young ones and a mother or a father for everyone.

Teacher almost works seven days a week. Her tasks do not cease after office hours, they resume at home. Lesson plan and audio-visual aids must be prepared religiously for tomorrow’s lesson. She is accountable in organizing pupils’ records and accomplishing related forms.

Very exhausting career but still the kindhearted teacher never gets tired while waiting for the sun to grin and shine again.

“How can she manage her job efficiently?” someone may ask. I was once had a short conversation with my co-teacher. She said, “Teaching is a calling, a vocation. Filled with sacrifices, yet those things bring you happiness indeed. At the end of the day, you are physically worn-out but emotionally delightful.”

Teacher encounters diverse personalities. Different factors will contribute their behavior inside the classroom. Some pupils are just contented sitting in their seats the whole session – the timid type, while the others are active. Positive and negative responses towards the situation might be perceived by the teacher. A versatile teacher can handle it efficiently. She knows their individual differences, therefore she deals with them patiently. No one is left behind. She controls the troublemaker child whose mind is just to initiate fight and motivates him to become a good leader, raises the morale of a desperate child, supports those who are always engage themselves in school programs and activities and encourages those who are slothful.

The dignity of a teacher is evident. Whatever circumstances may arise, she is constantly being as the way she should be. In decision making, firmness and fairness are manifested.

Teacher’s compensation now a days is much higher than the past. Adopting the modern technologies in teaching is reasonably accessible. Different hi-tech gadgets today are introduced by media. A very well-informed teacher keeps herself knowledgeable so that better learning will be realized.

Somehow, as the year goes by, those little children we’ve known before will be successful in different careers they have chosen and surely somebody will proudly say “I am a teacher.” The commitment showed by her old teacher will enlighten her to pursue the mission for the next generation.

References: