TEACHER’S ROLE DURING PANDEMIC CRISIS

Teachers across history have proven their capabilities by doing their part to help ensure that no student is left behind when the challenges to learning have been difficult.

As teachers, we now have to focus on creating greater co-education preparedness for responding to future disasters, to ensure we are well-prepared for future events. Teachers must be prepared to teach across high- or low-tech platforms whether online, in blended or interactive education environments to create a more resilient workforce in times of economic crisis.

All, particularly those living in rural and remote areas, should have access to digital infrastructure and connectivity. In the sense of COVID-19, states, organizations, and others have a greater obligation to do so. We encourage the government to safeguard teachers’ well-being and job security and include them in the COVID-19 recovery programs.

It is important to understand the teachers’ roles in education to make sure our young people can achieve their full potential, to provide the required short-term economic stimulus, and to bring the community together as a cohesive whole.
