TEACHERS IN PANDEMIC

by:
Mc Allen De Silva

The corona virus (COVID-19) pandemic has fully changed the education in the country. It made the teaching and learning even more challenging this time. With the opening of classes last October 5, 2020, the modular distance learning was introduced to the public as the new modality of education in the new normal situation.

Both teachers and students were affected by this sudden change and both opt to adjust in a fully emerging system of modular learning. For most students, modular learning would be a great challenge since not everyone has experienced it in the past, it consists of modules, DepEd TV lessons, and online classes. That is why, the teacher and parents’ role in child’s learning is vital in the new set-up of education.

On the other hand, teachers should quickly adjust to cope up with the demand of education in the new normal but as for technology based-teaching concerns, teachers need gadgets and Internet connectivity to monitor the progress of students and to respond on their concerns and queries.

Despite all these, teachers are in arguably commendable for not giving up and giving their full extent by any stretch to ensure the quality of education that the students need even in the pandemic.

References:

www.sunstar.com.ph/ampArticle/1869674
https://www.pna.gov.ph/articles/1126058