TEACHERS’ PROFESSIONAL GROWTH

by:
Joy Marie A. Salvador
Teacher III, Duale Elementary School

Passing the Teacher’s Board exam and having years of experience in teaching do not stop the eagerness of the teacher to grow professionally because they believe that when you are in the field “Education is a never ending process.” This means that teachers must be lifelong learners in order to teach every generation of students.

They need to have professional growth for their students. Through attending seminars, trainings and workshops, teachers discover new teaching strategies that help them improve their teaching skills. These teachings skills provide the needs of the students which result to better achievement.

It helps them to be more competent and stands out from the rest. It makes them more up to date. Professional development trainings also lead them to become better in classroom management and in handling organizational works in the school. It makes them effective and efficient teachers. It is also an additional achievement for them.

Aside from attending seminars, some teachers still continues their education by enrolling in Graduates schools. Despite of their busy schedule and works, still they spend their weekends in studying. It helps teachers to become better educators or even become competent future school administrators.

And practically speaking, professional growth also benefits the teachers financially. As the teachers step forward in their position, they also receive an increase in their salary. Increase in salary still motivates every teacher to become productive and it motivates them to work hard.

References:

https://www.mdrc.org/publication/professional-development-teachers