TEACHERS - STUDENTS GOOD RELATIONSHIP

by:
Riza D. Bagtas
Teacher II, Mariveles National School - Cabcaben

Constructive connection between teachers and students is the strong scheme seem to be effective. On the other hand, a lack or counteract connection will dumb or even refute the welfare of even the most effective strategies. Maybe, the sturdiest point is that connection is a matter of student discernment. They have those relationships.

Teachers will have unquestionably sympathy for student’s performance, but now and then they may react less positively to given student. Hence, this won’t really affect how student perceive his or her relationship with the teacher. The primary facets are guidance, care and the feeling of acceptance.

The succeeding teacher actions develop the consciousness in students that they have a sanguine correlation in them. Showing interest in students live by knowing students by name; asking them what they thought of present occurrences, such as, a sports, game, popular movie or songs; asking their interest; and create a shielded and affectionate environment.

Commending for students by means of how they effectuate in class and teacher stand up for them if they well. Thus, the teacher is more committed to an arbitrary criterion than to student’s success.

Teachers can promote the perception of the teacher advocacy by setting up times when students can speak singly with them, reinforcing underachieving students to work harder and helping them determine what they need to work on most.
References:

Art and Science of Teaching / Relating to Students: It's What You Do That Counts