TEACHING AS YOUR VOCATION

Teaching is not an easy job. It is a demanding job. We come early to school, we handle several numbers of pupils, we prepare many reports, we talk the whole day, and the list goes on. For others, being a teacher is not advisable for their family members to take for it is stressful. But for some who look at the fast a view of life, teaching is their vacation. “Vocare” is a Latin word for vocation. A brief meaning of it is “to call.” If there is a call from somewhere, there must be a caller along with it and one who is being called. There must also be a response. For Christians, the Caller is God Himself. Many of us, (especially those who are dedicated) believe that they are here because of the call to teach. Their stay signifies that they have positively responded to the call. They believe that God wanted them to light others’ paths. When you are a teacher both in mind and in your heart, there is an assurance that you perform well. You contribute to the organization's success. More importantly, if for you, teaching is a vocation, you know the right trail on your duties simply because, God is in your heart and you adhere to His call.
