They say that teachers are very much committed to their profession. Let us enumerate their teaching commitments as they perform their tasks in service to their much-loved students.

As a teacher, you may ponder on the succeeding commitments that are vital in the realization of your duties as a true educator in your school.

The teacher is expected to produce a lifelong learner. He or she has to develop a learner that is productive and ready to face the world and life challenges. The teacher has to put the learner as his/her topmost priority. It is very important for a teacher to create a protégé who will soon be a dynamic member of the society.

It is also one of the protocols of the teacher to follow the curriculum religiously. The teacher is committed to teach all the prescribed topics, lessons and skills as mandated by the authorities. The instructions are made clear that a teacher must teach the subjects to the fullest using the most appropriate methods.

The teacher is committed to trace and seek for the needs of the students. The teacher has to find out the strengths as well as the weaknesses of each learner. In doing this, he or she is committed to make plans for their development and continuous progress.

The teacher is committed to work hand-in-hand with the stakeholders particularly with the parents in monitoring the progress of the learners. It is truly endearing if a teacher updates the status of each learner thereby helping and assisting him or her to become an achiever.
The teacher is also committed to have a link with the community. The school is connected to a lot of people and agencies in the society. The teacher is anticipated to interact with them most especially regarding matters that are connected to the school and to the profession.

Above all, the teacher is committed to practice virtues like honesty, transparency, kindness or compassion, hard work or industry, love and care. These values are indeed affecting not only the teachers but also the people around them most especially the most-treasured young individuals…the learners.

The teacher being a very important member of the society is instilled with these worthwhile commitments that truly make him/her remarkable.
