Teaching is the noblest profession. Yes, indeed. It involves different people with the same level of dedication and respect for the vocation that makes it self-sacrificing. It is an inclination that had people who accepted the duties and responsibilities wholeheartedly. Teaching appears in different forms or aspects.

Teaching, according to Line Dalile is an affair of the mind. It is a mind game. Teaching is the process of imparting knowledge and skills to the learners to perform at their best in order to receive an outstanding grade. That is why teaching needs people who are capable of bearing and transferring competencies and wisdom to the students. Teachers patiently utilize their intellect to produce rational and logical learners.

Teaching is an art. It shows in different forms. It is an art, because teachers use their creative thinking to provide teaching materials, make classroom conducive to learning, and organize learning through lesson planning and teaching strategies suited for diverse learners. It is an art, because teachers move in different angles to teach students. They don’t care if they appear funny or ugly in the eyes of the students as long as they do their task to make learners learn in all means, they don’t mind it.

Teaching is an engagement of the heart. It needs a heart that never loses its emotions. Teachers, who do not care and understand the students, are taking teaching as a job and not a vocation. Teachers, who show love and concern for the students, view teaching and the students as the sources of strength and confidence. Students need the heart of a teacher, because it releases the discomfort that the students are feeling. Students learn best when their teachers are teaching with patience and dedication.
Teaching is an investment of virtue. It teaches students to understand life, struggles and pain. It teaches them to share their happiness and blessings to others who are in need. It makes learners capable of handling unbecoming circumstances through the virtues of love, patience, and perseverance. It develops the totality of every student in order to cope and adapt with the varying needs and situations in the society. Teaching makes learners responsible citizens of our country who are respectful to fellowmen. It also changes the behavior of the learners for the better.

Teaching is life. It gives hope to the students and those who want to learn. It carries practical skills essential to produce lifelong learners who are capable of performing the tasks at their best in the different industries in our country. Teaching brings chances to those who left formal schooling in favor of work through alternative mode of studying like Open High School Program and Modular Approach.

Teaching needs teachers who have brilliant mind that can efficiently transfer knowledge and a heart that can understand the needs of each student. Teaching requires people who will serve as actors in front of the learners to execute the lessons in different angles and people who are good enough to imitate by the young generation. Teaching brings life to both teachers and the students.
