TEACHING NEVER STOPS

While the world is on pause, it makes me realise that teaching is a never-ending act.

As the classroom setup shifts to distance learning, teachers can no longer have a live interaction with the learners. This time, self learning modules are to be provided for the students, which are expected to be completed after a week.

Traditional teaching may have stopped but there are other ways of sharing valuable lessons to the people around us.

At home, we can teach our family the importance of faith. As we continue to live with uncertainties, it is the perfect time to reflect with our spiritual lives and improve our relationship with God. Let us encourage our loved ones to strengthen our prayer life and continue to trust God and His amazing works.

At school, though we communicate with our students through social media, we can teach them about kindness. Let us remind them to be kind with their words as they spend most of their time online. The world has already caused us so much pain so it is high-time we avoid making hurtful comments against anyone.

In our community, we can teach our neighbours the value of giving. Let us not hesitate to extend a helping hand to those who suffer because of the pandemic and the recent typhoons that hit the country.
Lastly, we can teach ourselves to practice self-love. While we are working hard to provide for our families, it is important to prioritize ourselves once in a while.

True enough, teaching is a never-ending act. It can happen anytime, anywhere. We have no reasons not to learn.
