Teachers are said to be the molders of the learners, they are indeed the educators of the future leaders. The big question is how to teach and shape the leaders of tomorrow. The teachers should consider the best means to accomplish this gigantic task.

Teach them to love God. The very first thing that we should teach our learners is to love God above all. We should instill in them that they should give the highest regard to God who is our Creator and Provider.

Teach them the knowledge they owe to learn. The future leaders need to receive quality education. This kind of education is achieved if ample knowledge would be provided.

Teach them the essential skills. The future leaders also need to acquire practical skills. These skills are life skills and they are applicable for life activities. Teachers have the big responsibility to teach these skills so that the learners would be very productive.

Teach them the right values. The future leaders must be shaped with good values. These values would guide them in dealing with different people, situations and practices.

Teach them to practice virtues. Living a life with virtues is what a future leader must have. Teachers should instruct the learners to always uphold and imbibe virtues in life and in leadership.

Teach them to respect people. The future leaders are expected to be the models of respect. They should learn respect not only at home but also in school.
Teach them how to solve problems. Teachers should also teach the learners how to solve various problems. Since leaders face different situations, ways of handling them would be worth-knowing.

Teach them the ways to face life challenges. The future leaders must be trained in dealing with different challenges in life and in leadership. This would establish firm and strong leadership.

Teaching future leaders would be worth-gratifying, rewarding and fulfilling if done in great ways.
