TEACHING WITH COMPASSION

by:
Anna Liza R. Libao
Master Teacher I, Orani South Elementary School

A teacher is not just born to teach but to go beyond the principles of education. Since a teacher is dealing with a roster of promising kids, taking care of them would be a great challenge. There is one important factor that must be considered upon the adherence to the duties bestowed on the teacher and that is compassion.

Dealing with a diverse group of learners would require a lot of patience and understanding, even a pot filled with compassion. To show compassion is such a worthy undertaking that every teacher in the school must take into consideration. Let us cite instances on how a teacher manifests this idea.

Upon the arrival of the students in the school, the teacher may notice that they come from different places with different backgrounds. The compassionate teacher should welcome them with open arms and make them feel that the school is their second home.

There are times that the students find difficulty to adjust in the school and a compassionate teacher guides them in dealing with circumstances, making life in school easy and comfortable. Show them that the teacher is a second parent where they could lean on in times of uncertainty in the school.

As students go on with their studies, there are times that they commit mistakes and the compassionate teacher would understand them and certainly would direct them in the proper path. It is too good to know that teachers are here for the students to address their needs and to answer their never-ending queries.
Compassionate teachers are open to listen to the sentiments of the students, accepting their views and tolerating their dreams. In times of worries, anxieties and apprehensions, the teacher is ready to advise and boost the morale of the depressed and disheartened.

The teacher with compassion shows moral support to the students who are striving to be at their best and who are uplifting their lives in the midst of challenges and obstacles. Building their confidence or self-esteem is one great role that a compassionate teacher plays.

Kindness is served to all most especially to those who need it. Being a teacher, you need to empathize with those young people who seek for help and guidance. Certainly, compassion is the key to better understanding. A teacher’s loving heart therefore should be filled with great compassion.

References:
https://www.myguruedge.com/our-thinking/myguru-blog/teaching-compassion-to-students