THE COUNTERPART OF TEACHERS ARE THE PARENTS

by:
Josephine s. Hunter
Teacher III, Tipo Elementary School

There’s a great responsibility in the world of pedagogy. An undeniable statement close to reality. For the future, youth help out to establish their life by all educators around. These are the teachers, who are very dedicated to giving all. Providing the right education for all is somewhat a duty for the teachers to do by all means.

In children’s academic achievement, motivation is important to see vividly. Yes, teachers can contribute but this is not a solo battle in the first place. Therefore, the influence of a child’s parent is needed. Parent’s involvement in a child’s education can be determined as a student's success.

Pupil’s home support will develop a lifelong love of learning when parents engaged themselves in their children’s school lives. Parental involvement in education matters now. Teachers can only provide the proper education they needed in the future but parents have this power to influence them to be on the right path.

In school nowadays, there is parent and teachers tandem. Teachers mean it, that they need parents to help to make children learn well, and meet the education goal. Parents’ encouragement affects their child’s attitudes towards school motivation. Their parents as children’s first teachers have this key role in shaping up their character.

There are some uncertainties always possible to happen in school. Misbehavior may be seen sometime. For that, teachers need the parent to guide their children. In these scenarios, teachers can only give pros and cons ideas, but parents still have this influence on doing the right thing.
Building collaborative parent-teacher relationships is a compelling act. It allows boosting the communication about what their children need. Meet and greet is a great way to know each other. Since the pupils are the center of this relation, teachers must be open to parents with what the pupils’ best needs.

Indeed, the counterpart of the teacher is the parents. Teachers need parents' influence, encouragement, and assistance in developing the classroom’s capacity to grow. For now, we have the Parent-Teacher Associations doing in all schools. This is a good act to communicate. Parents are the most crucial partner of the child’s education. Schools only provide necessary learning but parents are their determiner to be a better one. For the best result, such a relationship between parent and teacher is imperative. Success will not come easy though, but the rewards are too great for the school not to try.

References: