THE DECREASE IN LEARNING

by:
Estrella R. Abadia

Today’s technology offers a lot nowadays. It opens a lot of windows for improvement. It gives chances even for the homeless ones. Success could be visible to everyone with eyes wide open. But when we talk about this involving formal education we could sense negativity from our learners. It is quite depressing that the results speak mainly how the learners are frustrated with the ruling of the formal education where they need to survive instead of they need to learn.

They tend to experience fear, when they should be enjoying it. They feel disgust, when they should be quite excited. They see it as annoying, when they should be motivated. What are we doing educators? Do we somehow misunderstand the system of the education? Or do we apprehend ourselves too much? That we forget that we need reach out to our learners for us to be effective and be able to inculcate knowledge. That somehow, we are responsible for their adversities. That we may be the one responsible for their anxiousness. That we lead them more on deteriorating themselves instead of pulling each other to be a whole.

We can do better, if we are going to be more sensible than the usual. We could serve better, if we are going to be more dedicated even without eyes looking at us. We can help them more.
References:

http://www.abante-tonite.com/epekto-ng-tek놀로한티.htm