THE NOBILITY OF THE TEACHING PROFESSION

by:
Haren Bronia Valencia
Teacher III, Hermosa National High School

In the conformity with what Aristotle said, “Those who educate the children are more to be honored than those who produce them, for these only gave them life, those the art of living well.” So as the quote was clearly stated, the message also conveys its meaning. Teaching is an art. It provides a noble service to the society to make a more beautiful and meaningful world. Teaching is a profession that provides knowledge and guidance and is absolutely the noblest profession among all the other professions, because they are the one who teach all the other professionals who underwent education with the teacher. They are required to work in relationships where they have greater insight than most of those they work with. By definition, teachers are usually the oldest people in the room and, sometimes, the most mature. Insight requires that teachers defer personal fairness for leadership. The people they meet might be frustrated, sometimes angry and often have no idea how to make positive changes in their lives. This profession is not fair, but it is how we teachers lives.

Another essential thing about the existence and provision of teaching is that it brightens and enlightens the mind of the teachers and the students at the same time. And thus, in this noble profession, students are not the only one who learn from their teachers but the teachers as well learn lessons from the very fast paced world that is full of struggles. So they are both beneficiaries of education through teaching. Another side of this is that the key to this profession is helping students grow in knowledge and skills. Teachers don’t have to learn how different they really are. But the final result of teaching is to create dependence. It is much harder to know the students, to take seriously who they are and what they can or cannot do, and to support their learning and their ideas, even if they are immature.
The process of preparing the next generation is in the hands of our educators either be skilled professionals and workers including doctors, nurses, engineers, priests, policemen, legislators, politicians and even ordinary citizens. We can say then that teaching is a very powerful instrument that God uses to guide, preach and touch lives in their own unique way. An educator’s job is to build a vision of success in a young person’s head that is so strong nothing will tear it down.

It is their moral responsibility to equip every individual’s future; to show the right path, to encourage them to showcase their potentials and to have a great impact and a boundless contribution in the society we live in. Those are only the myriad reasons why “Teaching is the Noblest Profession” for it possesses great characteristics in order to say that they deserve to be recognized and highly acclaimed as the renowned and excellent in the field. Teaching is the noblest profession. Don’t cheapen that nobility. If the knowledge does not reach all of the students find a way to teach the same information in such a way that the message will eventually reach all of them. Will that be easy? Not at all. Is it critical? Absolutely. Teachers may not be the perfect one but they are following the reflection of their own perfection.

References:

http://www.teachers.ab.ca/Publications/ATA%20Magazine/Volume%2087/Number%201/Articles/Pages/The%20Nobility%20of%20Teaching.aspx https://www.questia.com/magazine/1G1-429736351/the-nobility-of-teaching http://www.clarke.edu/media/files/current_students/this%20i%20believe%20the%20noble%20profession.pdf https://www.linkedin.com/pulse/nobility-teaching-dr-john-w-workman-phd-