THE SOUL OF EDUCATION

by:
Mariven M. Cruz

Often, education is perceived as the key for a better future because the veterans have imprinted on the minds of the younger ones to pursue it to be qualified for the professions that will make them gain power. There is no single doubt about what the older ones have advised to the youth. Education really opens many doors and improves one’s quality of life. To be sent to school is both a right and a privilege. Children, no matter what their backgrounds are, have the right to learn and explore the world. On the other hand, education is a privilege because it is something that should be fully granted to those who are willing to dedicate their whole selves – their hearts and time. Those are the significance of education, but what most of the people miss or fail to see about education is its soul. Yes, education has soul.

To feel the soul, we need to communicate with the children. Outside their favorite subjects, you can ask them why they are studying. One child might not understand why he/she is in his place, but others already know that they can be whatever they want when they study hard. There are those who aspire to change the world or rule it. Some dream big so they can give back to their parents, but it is not easy as you think. Dreaming is free, but we cannot simply evade struggles. The truth is everyone has their own difficulty in life. Some are having trouble to attain bigger educational background because of financial shortage. Few can’t even pursue the first stage of school because of their abnormalities or physical conditions. There are college students who are about to make it, but all of a sudden they collapse because their mental health starts to eat them alive. Those problems that stop children from gaining education are nothing if we know how to share and touch life. We will learn and earn more if we know how to give hand and lift others up. Helping is easy. Being kind is free. Motivating makes us more powerful. Listening and talking divert one who suffers from the wrong path.

In school we meet different people. Through pursuing education, we encounter different lives of people around us. We share differences, and we learn to put ourselves in other people’s shoes. We also appreciate the similarities among us. We learn to understand the reasons behind different actions and approach of people. Respect inside us grows as we learnt to communicate and value relationships.

That is the soul of the education. It’s not about the papers, the pens or the curriculum. It’s the story of the children and what inspires them to wake up and make their dreams come true. We keep each other alive by sharing what life has taught us. Indeed, experience is the best teacher.

References:

https://buyessayfriend.com/essay-on-education