Based on my teaching experiences, I look at a teachers as portraiture that display personality, mood and expression. These subjects are the children to look at to gain their interest.

In my 20 years of teaching in public school, I gained better insights and understanding about my learners’ behavior and personalities. Here are some things that I prove effective in motivating learners to succeed in school:

1. Show care and concern to the learners. Knowing their life, ambition and makes simple gestures of letting them know that you care about them.

2. Inspire them. One factor of learners’ success is their inspiration. Discuss with them what they need to do and know in order to succeed. Praise them in their achievements no matter how small or big of their achievements. Be approachable, so that they will not intimidate them.

3. Develop values. Integration of values in every class session is a must. I see to it that every values should be develop in particular activity.

4. Show unconditional love. Accept the learners regardless of their mental capabilities, financial status and ethnicities. Do not criticize them, instead give them a second chance when they fail in their exams or projects.

5. Make a classroom conducive for learning. Make them comfortable in their seats, well ventilated area and lighting. Make sure that all activities suit to them and encourage each to participate.
