THINGS ARE TEMPORARY

The tragic outcomes of the coronavirus pandemic forced us to reassess our perspectives in life. As we live through fear and uncertainties, every day is a learning opportunity to change our outlook or expand our point of view.

Of all the many lessons the pandemic taught us, there is one that leaves me the biggest impact: nothing is permanent. The coronavirus pandemic has reminded us that everything in this world is temporary.

Many people lost their jobs, as thousands of businesses and companies closed. Many people were forced to use their savings and retirement funds, which means wealth is not forever. Many people got sick, including the healthy ones. Many people died, the old and the young. Just when we thought we got all things secured, life takes them away from us.

This is a reminder to make the most of what we have. Oftentimes, we take things for granted-our job, our health, our loved ones - thinking we could live with them forever. It is just unfortunate that we are reminded of this lesson in the most tragic and most unimaginable way.

Experience, they say, is the best teacher. This once in a lifetime pandemic has given us lessons as big as the health crisis. Let us take the good and the bad. Soon, we will come out of this nightmare stronger and better. Things are temporary, even this pandemic.
