TRUST VS. FEAR

by:
Aileen P. Navarro
Teacher III, Bataan School of Fisheries

There is no permanent thing in this world. What is constant is change. There are changes that brought us to be more mature, changes that make us tougher, changes that make us brave enough to face life, and then there are changes that brought us fear.

In this time of fear, we are faced with a lot of challenges, challenges that enable us to be more dependent on the One up there. This year made me realized that fear is not my thing. Though I seldom felt it from time to time, for I am the only human that is so vulnerable to everything that’s happening around me. But then, as I meditate I found myself conquering my fear by trusting Him whose always there watching every step of my way. I may never understand what’s happening especially during these times, but then His thinking is far deeper than what we humans are thinking. His ways are beyond what we may fathom as humans. Never a day did He left me, never a day did He abandoned me, so why fear? Instead, I learned to trust His will in my life, and His will beyond what the whole world is facing these days.

It may be hard to fully trust beyond what we see is happening around the globe, but trust me when I say that it is all worth it to put your trust in the One up there. He is the ultimate solution to every fear, He is worth every trust. Trust me on this, He is faithful and gracious and He will do amazing things in His time. So, what are you waiting for, trust the One up there and be blessed.
References:

[1] Sharon’s Blog