UNCOMPROMISED REALITIES IN EDUCATION

by:
Jennylyn L. Navoa
Teacher III, Limay National High School

A lot of things have come down to us regarding why and how education must be. Should a child grow with courage, intelligence, discipline, naturally, well-mannered with the classics and other step-by-step approaches, there were many ways to train a child.

The education of the Philippine society is derived from Western ideologies. An American system of education that invokes American ideologies. If people think the kind of education injected into society, this may go well alongside those times linger for the American Dream, or perhaps a greener pasture. However, should this thought lurk in this contemporary of time? Will the goals of education be the same?

Education must not be compromised. Every country has its system of education - and along with that system, subsystems existed. Why madrasah and other alternative forms of education exist within a system? It is because education cannot compromise culture and heritage. However, alongside the western trends and patterns in education, education must not be compromised by taking off these services to culture and heritage.

The goal of education is simple: to create individuals that may be useful to society. The question of how to develop them varies from one idea to another’s ideologies. Education is appropriately designed with a wealth of philosophies but with all these philosophies and ideologies sticking around. Not all of these were useful indeed, in general, or particular, then education must be reordered and rearranged.
Western philosophy is vital but neglecting our own culture and how we were brought in by time should not be forgotten.

References:

https://www.scholaro.com/pro/Countries/philippines/Education-System