People in every walks of life think of ways on how to use their own resources wisely and efficiently. Learning how to manage everything, not only time and effort but also your wealth, is relevant in achieving your aspirations in life.

All things here on earth are subject to change for nothing is permanent in this world. So, how one should make use of these resources meaningfully?

Values and attitudes help in determining how one chooses to use his resources. Values, to think of, are those things which are important to you. On the other hand, attitudes are the way you feel toward someone or something. The decisions you make concerning the use of time, energy and money are made on the bases of what is significant to you.

In addition, attitudes and values determine the use of energy as well as time. As an instance, teachers do work hard in nurturing the mind of every learner and yet, in reality, can’t wait for the school dismissal bell to get to the market for their family’s food. The lack of energy causes a teacher to develop undesirable attitudes toward work and family.

If education, is your top value, you will be concerned about saving money for your graduate school and finish short - term courses for master’s degree or even pursue to doctor’s degree. Another, you may feel that your top value is your family, and yet you may wish unnecessary purchases from the member of your family. On the other hand, values determine what you prefer to do and buy.

These preferences influence your behavior and your success which in turn help shape your attitudes. How you live day by day, month by month, and year by year is called your life style. You make personal choices that determines your life style. Hence, to manage your wealth wisely and efficiently, is through learning how to weigh your values and evaluating your attitude in order to have a happy and meaningful way of living!
