VALUING TEACHING PRINCIPLES

by:
Angustia A. Guddaran, MASE
Teacher III, Hermosa National High School

In our everyday living, we often make numerous decisions, either not very important or meaningful. As we get up in the morning, we thought of the right suit to wear for work, the different tasks we will do first, how we comply into our expected events or situations and which profession we are going to track. Thus, the basis in dealing with these choices is the awareness of the guiding principles and to stand firmly is more significant in reaching your goals in life.

The determination or willingness to improve oneself will be realized through hardworking and dedication to whatever career you have chosen in life. The realization of a person’s dream lies on his hand and through God’s help and guidance. It is very important to set plans every day. To be firm on your plans for the day is relevant, that is, listing down all tasks and to stick to that plan and be able to achieve them. Overlapping or congested plans for the day must be avoided for you will not be able to accomplish them, instead, setting another day for these is a must. Hence, make plans which are attainable for the whole day in order to succeed and you will be happy.

Teaching is yet considered as the noblest profession. It is known to us that there would be no other professions without us, teachers! And being part of the system, dedication and hard work must be within me in order to fulfill the goals of education. It is a matter of setting objectives every day in order to succeed. Thus, mind setting is a very significant flavor in the attainment of these objectives.
Additionally, teaching methods are based on two types of principles: General Principles and psychological principles (Principles of Teaching and General Principles Teaching Method, 2017). The General Principles are:

1. Principle of Motivation.
2. Principle of Activity (learning by doing).
4. Principle of linking with life.
5. Principle of definite aim.
7. Principle of Selection.

Furthermore, consistent connection on your assumptions and principles in life transforms you successfully because your energy is directed in one path only. To be transparent with your ethical values or standards is relevant in dealing with other people. There are people who are judgmental and often likes criticizing other people destructively. It is important to give out your values so as they may know how to deal with you most especially during conversation among your friends and colleagues or co-workers, acquaint them with what moral rules or beliefs you stick with. It is not our duty and responsibility to always please other people. For there are people even though we do them a lot of favor but still they hated us and don’t know your worth. Pleasing this kind of people is suicide instead be with people who value and appreciates your efforts and kindness.

Lastly, to stay connected on your assumptions and principles, do your duties and responsibilities whole heartedly and patiently. Be a role model. Set yourself as a good example to others and not like a parasite that lives and depends on a host in order to survive.

References: