Communication is one of the vital elements in education. It not only delivers information but also stimulates work, strengthen attitudes and critical thinking. The absence of effective communication will result to distorted messages and learning may be muted. Communication is a course of shared information where listening is one of the main keys to understand. It includes different internal characteristics such as problem solving, assessment of others and self-talk. These characteristics help an individual for better communication. It is a process that makes the speaker to ensue clear and neat communication manner. Interpersonal communication’s ultimate goal is to conduct relevant objective messages.

Communication can be done not only verbally but also with body language. It is necessary that while communicating, we are aware of our surroundings, appearance, posture, body movement and eye contact. The listener will know when a speaker is unsure of what he/she is telling because it may contradicts what he/she says with his/her body language.

Relatively, effective communication is an essential factor in building positive environment in school through self-awareness, sending concise information and congruent messages. Communication is not only about comprehension, it is more on arrangement and obligation.
