When K-12 was introduced and passed though the congress and approved by the Senate there were so many negative reactions from the people especially parents and graduating high students. Instead of finishing the four (4) years in secondary school they have to take another two (2) years before they can take up their college course. But still, K-12 was implemented inspite of so many rejections from some institutions and from the parents. During my high school days from the year 1973-1974, “2-2 Plan” was already implemented in some cities like and Manila and I was one of the students and a product of said plan. When I reached the third year high school our teachers informed us to select only one whether the VOCATIONAL COURSE wherein we were allowed to take up any vocational courses or COLLEGE REPARATORY wherein we can pursue our college degree after graduation. Same with the K-12 where there is what we called TVL strand with different tracks like ICT, EPAS, Dressmaking Food & Beverage, etc. Considering a student has taken that course, it will be easy for him to look for a job especially in abroad wherein those kinds of jobs are in demand. Presently, the government has enough budget for the K-12 giving the students adequate supplies needed to be used in their studies with free of charge and providing vouchers to students who are enrolled in some private schools who are offering K-12 course. Students nowadays who are enrolled in K-12 are so lucky because the schools have complete facilities and being provided some equipment to be used in their studies. The target of the government is to educate every Filipino citizen whether you are poor or not and even some Persons With Disability (PWD) are being encourage to study and being provided with modules to be used in their studies.
