WHEN DOES A CHILD’S EDUCATION BEGIN?

by:

Susan T. Sunga
Bagac Elementary School

Children are curious creatures. Nurture that curiosity but balance it with goal judgment. Parents should help their children respect different opinions by setting examples. If parents are tolerant of others’ views, children are likely to be also. Yet, it is important to teach children to stand up for their beliefs in a non-threatening way.

When some people think of education, they think of school-aged children. In reality, education begins when a child is a baby. Education begins at home. Those early lessons a child learns will guide him for the rest of his life. Lessons of respect, obedience and self-control will help a child become a successful adult.

When teaching children to obey, it is important for parents to do so with love. Make few rules, then enforce them. Be consistent. Also remember that the punishment should fit the misbehavior. The promises parents make should be kept. Children have faith in their parents and this trust should not be broken.

The education of a child begins at birth and continues throughout life. Parents should take this responsibility seriously and be thankful to God for the opportunity to educate one of his children.

References:

https://bigthink.com

Hurlock Elizabeth, “Effective Teaching Learning in Child-Friendly School,” Child Psychology