WHERE ARE WE GOING AFTER TODAY?

by:
Pauline Antoinette T. Gigante
Teacher I, Bataan School of Fisheries

The struggle is real. The pain is oozing. The questions are unanswered. The doubts are never fading. And where do you think we’re heading to?

It was such a blast because of this Novel Coronavirus or this COVID-19. It brought so many ups and downs to the whole world, not just in our nation. Every sector in our government has its own brawl. Every single detail had been meticulously observed and applied. After all of the affray in the financial support given by the national government, the difficulties in the Department of Health (DOH) has not ended yet education came across that made so much twists and turns. But never had a clear instruction to follow from the higher-ups. They made the declaration of having the classes last August, but then they’re the ones to cancel it, too. Claims of being prepared and ready were not been visible even up to the present that the classes are ongoing. The modules were not thoroughly checked. Contents, if not grammatically wrong, were not academically or culturally accepted. The means of distributing was not even planned and strategized fluidly. The funds run out of hands without getting the needs of the learners. The medium for learning was not even clear whether if it is going to be synchronous or asynchronous or that their so-called blended learning. The teachers did not know where to start. Webinars were given from left to right, even their Saturdays and Sundays were spent lavishly in their works.

No one has the chance to contradict what COVID-19 had given to us. It is no longer about who is rich and who isn’t. We all go through the same path. We started from scratch. We aim for the best, but there were still these hindrances, our unableness to fight due to our own faults, too. Do you think there is still a good thing in our education today? Where are we going after today? Is there a life waiting for us after this sunset?

References:

