WHY A NEED FOR TUTOR?

In the last 3 years when education began to take a dive, the business of tutoring become so entrenched that no one bothered about the proliferation of tutors.

Indeed, there are many teachers who really should not be teaching reason why tutors are stopping in to fill the slack.

As every school principal should know, a good teacher must be a good communicator. But when teacher communicates obfuscation instead of clarity, frustration instead of fun, what does the panicked parent do but look for a tutor.

Not only those presumed to be slow, sickly and lazy but even the most average kids, as well as the smart ones are being pushed to study under a tutor.

Some reasons why there is need for tutor.

1. Too much homework
2. Too many subjects
3. Too little pick up from teacher
4. Too late to find a school conducive to learning

I have nothing against teachers who cannot reach the children to open up their minds to the thrill of learning to learn, knowing to know.

This kinds of teachers open the door for tutors.
Tutors don’t come cheap. Hiring one is like paying for double matriculation. And think of the poor kids spending extra hours after class with their tutors when kids should be out playing to discover a world out there.
