One of the not so common favorite subjects of students and pupils is the arts. Arts subject tackles mainly about the artistry of a learner. The thing about arts is that not every individual has the natural ability to produce what is seen beautiful by everyone. A learner or even a teacher who teaches arts may not know how to do the most beautiful piece. But why is it still important?

According to Speak Art Loud (2010) at Wordpress.com, art recognizes events and experiences that allow us to have a richer understanding of history. Art reveals the color of cultural values, beliefs, and identity. Art will always live on and no matter where or when it is created it is still considered as art (John Sardona 2020). It also records our own lives and experiences over time. This is why it is very important to understand art itself.

But the thing is an art itself has a very diverse meaning. Not everyone has the same concept of art. One may be seen beautiful to one's eye but it may not be beautiful for others. But because of this, one can put his own meaning to art. And that is what we should teach everyone who's learning the art.

Creating a simple card for someone is considered art. And the message someone will put into it is exactly the meaning of that art. Everyone should realize that everyone can create art, may it be the most beautiful or not. By creating art you also create your own experience, by creating art you also create your own history, by creating art you learn your culture.

We should not be afraid to learn the art as our own hands itself can create the most amazing thing ever. And that is why art is also a great thing to learn.
