Master Teacher I, Bonifacio Camacho National High School

In the world where materialism exists, the genuine cause of teaching still prevails. The profession where teacher evolves still remains noble due to its heroic purposes.

Teaching with a purpose answers the 5 W’s and H questions in order to fulfil the mission of instructional delivery.

What? This answers the things to do in teaching. This connotes that a teacher has an important role to do in school. It is anticipated that teachers must perform the duties and responsibilities in order to create development and progress among the students.

Who? This pertains to the educational clientele of the teacher. As educator you have to consider that the child is the center of the educative process. It means that what a teacher does should be for the benefit and goodness of the learner. The child being the subject of the teaching-learning process deserves a good quality of education.

Where? This connotes the right place where the student should be taught with knowledge and skills, and be shaped in terms of character. The school is the perfect venue where the learner should develop and grow as a better individual.

When? This refers to the time that the students must learn. The time being spent in school is considered as the right time that the student may enjoy and savor the essence and fun of learning.

Why? This entails the real purpose teaching. This answers the great cause of the teaching profession. Teachers are not just simply performing their jobs but beneath it is the profound reason of creating a change and making a difference among the students.
How? This question may deal on how the teachers can efficiently and effectively perform their jobs in the school. By using their best abilities and applying the best teaching practices for sure they will be able to lead the learners to proper direction and will deliver the kind of education they deserve.

The 5 W’s and H of teaching should be considered by each teacher in order to be guided in the fulfilment of the teaching profession for the sake of the students they serve in the school.
